PROSPECTS FOR NORTH AND SOUTH VIETNAM

THE PROBLEM

To assess the situations in North and South Vietnam, to analyze the nature and scope of the Communist threat to South Vietnam, and to estimate the prospects for the next year or so.

CONCLUSIONS

- 1. The Democratic Republic of Vietnam (DRV) has thoroughly consolidated its political control in North Vietnam and, with extensive Bloc assistance, will probably continue to make rapid economic progress. Regimentation and food shortages have increased public unrest and dissatisfaction and resulted in some slackening of discipline among local officials. However, there is no significant organized opposition. The moterating influence of the aged Ho Chi Minh has prevented policy differences among top DRV leaders from erupting into serious intraparty strife. When Ho is no longer active there will probably be a struggie for power between the Moscow-oriented and the Pelping-oriented elements of the party. (Paras. 13, 15, 21, 23-25)
  - 2. There is some dissatisfaction in South Vietnam with Diem's leadership among members of the cabinet, the bureauchter, and the military, ari: ingout of the serious internal security situation and irritation with Diem's system of family rule. Diem

- has initiated a number of political reform measures, but probably will not relinquish his highly centralized method of government control. The argree of dissatisfaction will probably be directly related to the success or failure of the Government of Vietnam (GVN) efforts against Communist guerrilla and subversive activity. (Paras. 31, 34, 39)
- 3. The army will continue to be a major factor in future political developments in South Vietnam. We believe that the chances of a inilitary coup have been reduced by recent manifestations of US support of the Diem government and by the substantial increase in US aid to help South Vietnam meet its internal security problems. Although there has been a decrease in indications of coup-plotting within the military in recent months, certain basic dissatisfactions with the national leadership persist. If the fight against the Viet Cong goes poorly during the next year or the South Victnamese Army suffers heavy casualties, the chances of a military coup would substantially increase. (Para, 37)

- 4. A major Hanoi-directed Communist offensive against the Diem government and directed toward reunification of Vietfram under Communist control is under The Communist apparatus in South Vietnam, the Viet Cong. now probably has my than 12,000 hard-core members and several thousand supporters engaged in guerrilla warfare, terrorist operations, political and propaganda activity, sabotage and intelligence activities. This campaign is intended to assert Communist authority over increasingly large parts of the countryside in anticipation of setting up fully "liberated areas" in which GVN authority is effectively denied. or of so weakening the Diem government as to precipitate its overthrow, or both. At present, more than half of the rural area in the productive and highly populated region south and southwest of Saigon, as well as several areas to the northwest of Saigon, are under extensive control of the Communists. (Paras, 50-51)
- 5. We believe that the Hanoi regime will increase the pace and scope of its paramilitary activity during the next few months. South Vietnam's urban centers will probably be subjected to increasing Niet Cong terrorism. Further Viet Cong attempts to assassinate Diem are likely. However, we believe that with continued high levels of US ald and a stremuous and effective GVN affort, the problem of Viet Cong control of large areas of the countryside can in time be reduced. (Paras. 58-60)

- 6. Even if the GVN does reduce Viet Cong strength, it will require continued maximum effort—military, political, and economic—to maintain its authority. South Vietnam will not be able to sea! completely its borders with North Vietnam. Laos, and Cambodia to the infiltration of material and personnel from North Vietnam. (Paras. 60-61)
- 7. Thus, the outlook in South Vietnam is for a prolonged and difficult struggle with the Viet Cong insurgents. At the same time that the government is prosecuting the military campaign in the war against the Communists, it will have to act to prevent internal weaknesses and strains from causing its collapse. Pathet Lao and North Vietnamese forces already control most of southern Laos except for towns along the Mekong, and if a Communist or leftist government comes to power in Laos the GVN struggle against the Viet Cong will take on new, more perilous dimensions. If there is a serious disruption of GVN leadership as a result of Diem's death or as the result of a military coup any momentum GVN's countermsurgency efforts had achieved will be halted or reversed, at least for a time. The confusion and suspicion attending a coup effort could provide the Communist an opportunity to seize control of the governmen'. (Paras. 61-62)

DISCUSSION

INTRODUCTION

B After the partition of Vietnam in 1954 the DRV with Blue aid, set about consolidating its control in the north, reconstructing a budly damaged econ my, and organizing society along Communist fines. At the same time, the regime took measures to . achieve its ultimate objective, the unification if the country under a Communist government. During this early period, a cover-Communist subversive and guerrilla apparatus, known as the Viet Cong, remained in the south after the regioupment of Commum a forces called for by the Geneva Accords. It resorted only occasionally to guerrilla or to a ist action, and concentrated primarily upon political activities designed in part to influence the national elections provided for by the Geneva Accords. The Communist leaders in Hanoi probably siewed the future with confidence, contrasting the chaos prevailing in the south with their own tight control in the north

9 However, by carly 1957 it had become clear to the Communist leaders that the Dien: government, with US assistance, was making considerable progress toward consolidating its position and disrupting the Viet Cong clandestine ofganization. Moreover, the Communists has concluded that Diem would never permit elections under conditions shich would assu. . a Communist majority As a result, the Hanoi authorities began to reorganize and revitatize the Viet Cong apparatus and to chift Communist factics in South Vietnum toward increased terrorism subversion and small (ca.) guerrilla attacks in the countryside. By la c 1959 a general Hapoi-directed Communist offensive was well under way. Since that time the Viet Cong guerrala-terrorist opparatus has more, than tripled in size to over 12,000, and the area, soope, and effectiveness of its activities have twen greatly expanded to The GVN, under the determined leadersimplof President Diem, has been confionted by serious economic, political, and security problems since the end of the Indochina War. Although it has made remarkable progress in some respects, it has not been able to bring the Viet Cong under control, or thus far revelue the recent deterioration of internal security. This has caused a gradual eros on of public support, frustrated many of the government's economic and social programs, and created a serious political problem of dispatisfied military officers and could servants.

11 Communist paramilitary and subvet-ive efforts against Laos and South Vietnum are probably closely related. In both countries there were indications in 1958 and 1959 that the governments were becoming bolder and 9 more effective in their anti-Communist elforts and that Communists assets were beginning to be cut back. The shift in Consmunist tactics to emphasis upon paramilitary activity became noticeable in both Laos. and South Vietnam at about the same time The Communists probably now view Laos and South Vietnam as two parts of a single broad political-military strategy Pathet Lao and the Viet Cong are both instruments of the Lao Dong, the North Vietnamese Communist Party. Hanol is the implementing agency for Bloc activity in both countries, and it probably is allowed considerable local freedom in conducting the Communist guerrilla and subversive campaign

II. THE SITUATION AND OUTLOOK IN NORTH VIETNAM

A. Introduction

12. The North Victnamese leaders are long-term. Communist revolutionaries closely united by their prolonged armed struggle against the French. By the time they took over North Victnam in 1954 they had acquired extensive practical experience in organization, control techniques and guerrilla warfare. They had at their command a large, loyal, and victorious army. They had considerable support among the peasants and intellectuals. Their leader, Ho Chi Minh, was widely known and respected throughout Vietnam as a nationalist leader.

13. However, the regime lost much of its nationalist appeal as it quickly and ruthlessly set about consolidating its control and reducing centers of potential dissidence, particularly among the Catholic and tribal minorities. These measures, along with the continuing privations and hardships of the people, resulted in a waning of public enthusiasm and a rising unrest and dissatisfaction among the people. There has been some slackening of vigilance and discipline among the security forces and local officials. and there have probably been some local peasant uprisings in the wake of last year's disastrous crop failures. However, in the past two years the regime has accelerated its efforts to strengthen the party apparatus, particularly at lower and middle levels, and its instruments of control-the party, the army, and the police-remain firmly established and responsive to its command. The prevailing public attitude is one of apathy and passivity, and there is no significant organized opposition movement.

B. Political Situation and Outlook

14. The DRV's leadership has been remarkably stable; the elite group, like that of Communist China, gained its status and cohesion in years of civil warfare. Ho Chi Minh's international reputation, his unique standing with the Vietnamese people and the rank and flie of the Lao Dong, and his ability to moderate intraparty disputes from a position above factionalism continue to make him the most important man in the DRV. Ho is Chairman of the Lao Dong and President of the DRV. It is not certain, however, just how actively he wields his power. He is 71 years old and there are several atrong youinger men in top operative posts in the party, government, and army.

15. During the past two years the regime has substantially reorganized its governing apparatus. It has had new elections for the National Assembly, the first since 1946; new leaders have been selected at all middle and lower echelons of the party; and the government structure has been further centralized. The National Party Congress hold in September 1990, the first in nine parts, adopted a new party constitution. The gavernmental machinery, still under tight parts control, is now probably better prepared to cope with its administrative problems.

16 During this period the party leadership has been confronted by serious domestic economic and political problems and by the questions of Bloc tactics and leadership at issue in the Sino-Soviet dispute. The Party Congress resulted in a reorganization of the party and in some shifts in individual rank ing and power among the Lao Dong leaders. These developments almost certainly brought to the surface tensions and policy differences among the "moderate" and "radical" elements within the top party leadership. Thus far, however, these differences have been kept under control, probably as the result of Ho's abilities to moderate party disagreements and the general appreciation among the Lao Dong leaders of a special need for party unity under present circumstances.

17. Differing lendencies within the Lao Dong leadership are represented by Le Duan and Truong Chinh. Over the past two years or so Le Duan and his "moderate" followers have been in the ascendancy and Ho probably considers him to be the heir apparent. -Le Duan holds the key position of First Secretary of the Lao Dong and controls an effective following within the party. He led the southern guerrilla forces for several years prior to the establishment of the DRV, and almost certainly is playing a major role in planning the current Viet Cong effort to overthrow President Diem and his government in South Vietnam. General Ve Nguyen Glap, Minister of Defense and Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces, tends to side with the "moderate" group. The Premier, 55-year-old, Moscow-trained Pham Van Dong, is very close to Ho and is somewhat of a fence straddler, but he is sympathetic to the policies of Le Duan.

18 Tealer of the "radical" group is Chinese-trained Truong Chinh, who had served as Secretary General of the party for 15 years until he was relieved by Ho in 1956. Truong Chinh's fall from grace was probably the result of his close identification with the regime's rapid and ruthless agrarian reform program which created many economic problems and tost the regime much of its early enthusiastic support from the peasantry. However, the Lao Dong probably still considers Truong Chinh as a leading ideologist, and he retains considerable strength among his polithuro colleagues and within the party. He continues to rank third in the Lao Dong polithuro

19 So long as Ho Chi Minh remains active. he will probably continue to moderate intraparty disputes and prevent serious strife When he is gone it will be much more ... ficult to keep factional rivalries and disputes under control. At present, Le Duan is probably strong enough to gain control of the party and thus of the regime. However, serious setbacks in South Vietnam or increased pressure from Peiping could swing party strength behind Truong Chinh's more radical group. In any case the governmental succession would probably appear superficially orderly with innocuous, elderly Vice President Ton Due Thang succeeding to the Presidency until the real struggle for power within the party had been decided.

26 Sino-Soviet Relations. North Vietnam occupies an intermediate position in the 8ino-Soviet dispute. The Vietnamese have a historic dislike and distrust of the Chinese to whom they paid tribute for many centuries and they deeply fear Chinese domination. On the other hand, the state of their culture and society and the nature of their political and economic problems are closely akin to those of Communist China, and the DRV's revised constitution, land reform, fax-ation, and agricultural programs are clearly based on Chinese experience. In addition, the proximity of Chine makes Perping's confinence and military influence strongly left.

21. Ho himself is Moscow-trained and he atmost certainly appreciates that only a strong relationship with Moscow can prevent the DRV from becoming completely subordinate to Peiping. He has kept the DRV and the Loo Dong in a generally neutral position in a the Sino-Sovlet dispute and is credited by some observers with having played a key role. at the November 1960 Moscow Conference in a bringing the Somets and Chinese sufficiently if together to produce the compromise Communique. The North Victnamese leaders. particularly Ho, will probably continue to maintain a middle position in Sino-Soviet differences, while pressing for inflitant Blocsupport of "wars of national liberation," such as Harni is waging in South Victoria

C. Economic Situation

22. Introduction. North Vietnam's economy is one of the most backward of all the Communist countries. Agriculture is the chlef occupation, and about 90 percent of the population lives in rural areas. North Vietnam has considerable development potential, however, since it possesses rich mineral, forest, and fishery resources. Moreover, although nearly all of the good arable land is now under production, per acre yields are low and can be greatly raised.

23. The Communist Bloc has invested heavily a in economic aid to North Vietnam, first to stabilize its war-torn economy and then to help its economy develop. Total Bloc economic aid committed so far amounts to

The principal source for economic data on North Vietnam is the DRV. The relatively small amount of information from other sources tends in 1902 cases to support the official DR3 claims.

Interred mineral reserves include high-grade anthracite coat, 20 billion tons (comparable in magnitude to the reserves of Japan or Czechoslovakla) iron ore, 150 million tons, plusphate neik I billion tons and chromite, 5 million tons. Untupped hydroelectile potential is estimated at 18 million km.

At this time Ho assumed the little of Secretary-General in addition to his post as Chairman of the party. In 1980 the post of Secretary General was abolished, making be Duan as First Secretary rank directly behind the Chairman.

about $900 million, of which about $400 million had been utilized by the end of 1960. With this assistance and its own concentration of resources and effort, North Vietnam has made rapid economic progress, raising its gross national product (GNP) by 13 percent annually from 1955 to 1960. North Vietnam's gross domestic investment as a proportion of total resources rose from 8 percent in 1955 to 22 percent in 1960 indicating that the economic base is being strengthered for continued rapid growth.

24 Agriculture. The DRV has been having serulus difficulties in agriculture as a result of adverse weather, mismanagement, and rapid, forced collectivization. The regime claims that the value of agricultural output increased 21 percent from 1956 to 1960, despite the 1960 drought, and that North Vietnam has become a net exporter of food Most of the increase in agricultural production, however, was in livestock, particularly draft animals. Rice production increased at a slower rate than the population, and production of subsidiary foods actually declined. Since 1956 per capita consumption of food has generally been below prewar levels, and in 1950 the per capita production of food was less than in 1956. The fact that the DRV was a net exporter of food in 1960 was made possible only by the regime's firm control of distribution and consumption The people generally are on a subsistence diet and in some areas shortages are critical Inevitably this has created widespread dis-Scontent with the regime.

25. The prospects for alleviating these shortages are only fair Assuming average weather, the DRV might be able to increase ford production at about 3 percent annually for some years to come. At this rate, food output by 1965 would reach about two-thirds of the 9 million ton goal for that year and barely remain ahead of the 25 percent rate of population increase. The acceleration of rural collectivization, which took place in the latter half of 1960, may generate sufficient additional peasant resistance to place even this art invenient in doubt

28 Industry Because of the DRV's rudimentary economy, the Three-Year Plan-(1958-1960) devoted nearly 70 percent of total industrial investment to light industry Light manufacturing accounted for two-thirds and mining and heavy manufacturing for one-third of all industrial output by value in 1960. Over the next five years light industry will continue to grow rapidly although proportionally greater stress will be laid on heavy industry and mining.

27. Mining accounts for 15 percent by value of DRV industrial output and nearly one-quarter of its industrial exports. Despite a four-fold increase in output since 1955, coal production in 1960 was barely up to the prewar (1930) high of 26 million tons. Over the next five years coal production will continue to rise, but there will almost certainly be more diversification as other. North Victnam mineral resources are exploited. Communist China will probably become an important customer for the rich supplies of phosphate rock.

28. The current Five-Year Plan shifts priority to heavy industry, particularly electric power, machine building, steel, and chemicals. The machine industry will be oriented toward support of agriculture and the chemical industry will emphasize fertilizer production. The plan calls for the production of 500,000 tons of pig iron a year (60 percent going into steel). The regime's failure to meet original Three-Year Plan goals for several important items (including coal, cement, electric power, and cotton cloth) suggests that the present Five-Year Plan goals should be appraised with caution.

29 Transportation. In spite of the emphasis given since 1954 to the rehabilitation of transportation, the rail not is not quite, back to its prewar size in terms of mileage; however, overall tonnage has increased Emphasis is also being placed on restoration of the road het to its prewar status. Rehandlitation of water transport has lagged There has been considerable development of strategic roads toward the border of Laos and the 17th Parallel. Long-discussed plans to widen the DRV's rail network from meter gailge to the 4 foot 812 inch standard gauge that is used an Communist China main lines may be carried out by 1965. The Hanoi-Dong Dang and the Hanoi-Lao Kay railway lines are operated at virtually integral parts of the Choicse Communist radway system. A large part of the freignt moving on these lines is Chinese Communist freight in transit across North Vietnam between Narning and Kunming

Construction of the DRV's first from and steel plant organization and technology being supplied by Communist Climas was scheduled for completion in 1960 with an initial annual capacity of 100,000 ton, but it is for behind schedule.

III. SITUATION AND PROSPECTS IN SOUTH VIETNAM

A. Political

30 Situation and Problems Despite its many remarkable achievements, South Victnam's national leadership never has generated much active public support. During the past year and a half. President Diem and his government have been more seriously criticized and challenged, particularly by members of the bureaucracy and the military establishment, than at any time smee he consolidated his authority in 1955-1956 The criticism and dissatisf, thon stem principally from serious concern with the internal security situation and from Diem's system of family rule. Despite his continuing personal prestige and reputation for integrity and courage. Diem remains an atoof and uninspiring figure to the Victnamese Communist propaganda intensifies public dissatisfaction with the Diem government, particularly among the peasants and urban laboring groups.

31 Within the framework of a democratic constitution. Diem and a small circle of relatives and confidants exercise supreme national power. Most members of the executive branch are personal agents of Diem, fearful of assuming responsibility or of taking initiative. The legislative powers of the National Assembly are strictly circumscribed. The press and radio are large, controlled by the government, and opposition groups and critics of the government have liftle opportunity to make their views widely known. This highly contributed regime has previded resolute and stable leadership, but it has alternated many politically conscious. South Victnamese and inhibited the growth of strong governmental and political institutions which could provide stability and direction if Diem were to leave the scene

32. A number of off hals including Vice President Nguyen Ngoe Tho, and some important increbers of the cabinet, the bureaucracy, and the military hase questioned seriously Diem's ability to lead the government and rally the people against the Communists during what they regard as the most critical period since the end of the Indochina War. These officials alto criticize Diem's failure to delegate responsibility and his reliance largely on memter; of his family, particularly his brother Ngo Dinh Nhu, for advice in the conduct of government affairs. Moreover, the fact that the Can Lao, a semicovert political apparatus, has been used by Diera and his brothers, Nha and Ngo Dinh Can not only to insure the implementation of policy but also to police the att-tudes and loyalty of the governmental agparatus has created considerable antagonism within the military hierarchy and the civil

33. The Diem regime was given a reprieve by the national elections of April 1961, in which Diem and Vice President Tho received nearly 90 percent of the total vote. Voter furnout was high, despite Communist efforts to Intimidate the voters. However, the election cannot be considered an accurate manifestation of support for Diem or his regime. Diem and Tho enjoyed overwhelming advantages in the campaign, there almost certainly was some medding with the returns, and the opposition candidates were political nonentities.

34 Since the April elections, Diem has indicated an intent to rectify some of the causes of dissatisfaction. He has reorganized his cabinet in an effort to improve effectiveness and coordination. He has instructed his ministers to spend more time in the countryside, seeing that programs are followed through and seeking to win over the population. He has begun a consolidation of his intelligence services and has made a number of moves designed to provide the military greater freedom of action. He has experimented with relaxing cintrol of the press and opposition groups. However, most of these moves have been initiated only because of urging from the US. Diem almost certainly has not changed his view that his kind of paternalistic authoritarianism is best for South Vietnam, particularly while the country is at war.

35 Diem has little respect for his domestic political opponents, whom he tends to view as dupes, Communists, or agents of the French. The opposition is in fact, largely a disparate assortment of disgruntled intellectuals, businessmen, and unsuccessful politicians, who have for one reason or another fallen out with the government. None of them has a national following of consequence, and few have any constructive ideas to offer. Although they are a source of annoyance to Diem and at times a disruptive factor in Saigon, they are not by themselves a significant present threat to the government.

36 The continued existence of restiveness and discatisfaction among military officers and other government officials is much more sericus. Diem has long recognized that the greatest threat to his government—aside from the Viet Cong—lies in the possibility of a military coup. The abortive coup effort by paratioop units in November 1960, which came very near succeeding, increased Diem's suspicions of the military. As yet no new coup group appears to have taken shape.

37. Political Prospects—The army will continue to be a major factor in future political developments in South Vietnam. We believe that the chances of a military coup have been reduced by recent manifestations of US support of the Diem government and by the substantial increase in US aid to help South Vietnam meet its internal security problems. Although there has been a decrease in Indications of coup-plotting within the military in recent months, certain basic dissatisfactions with the national leadership persist. If the fight against the Viet Cong goes poorly during the next year or the South Vietnamese Army suffers heavy casualties, the chances of a military coup would substantially increase

38. There is always a chance that Diem may be assassinated or leave the scene as the result of accidental or natural causes. Such a development would provide an opportunity and strong motivation for a group of military officers to scize control. On the other hand, the Viet Cong would be very likely to increase greatly their effor's to take over insuch an emergency situation and this hitght cause the military to close ranks in support of constitutional processes, at least through the transition period. In such event, Vice President Tho would succeed to the Presidency, and Nguyen Dinh Thuan, the Secretary of State for the Presidency and Assistant Secretary of State for National Defense, would probably continue to play a key supporting role. However, the Ngo family, probably led by Nhu and Can, would probably attempt to retain real political power and a contest for power might ensue.

39 In more general terms, the chief problem confronting the GVN is how to resolve the conflicting needs of highly centralized government control for effective antiguerrilla measures on the one hand and of liberalized, more demonstic political attitudes for greater public support of the government on the other. It is unlikely that Diem will undertake real political reforms in an effort to meet the complaints of the non-Communist opposition groups in Saigon, the peasants, and the military and civilian officials. In any case, Diem probably could not make enough politi-

NIE 50 61, "Outlook in Mainland Southeast Asta" dated 25 March 1961, paragraph 37, stated that in view of 'Diem's precarious political situation and the strength of Communist guerrilla and subversive pressures, we believe that the odds favor a second coup attempt some lime in the next year og sa

8. Economic -

40 Economic Situation. The economy of South Vietnam was severely weakened by the years of recurrent warfare after 1940 and its subsequent separation from the north Sources of supply and markets were disrupted. In the countryside, vital water control works were damaged or neglected and large areas of rice land were abandoned as prasants moved to urban areas in search of security. The influx of almost a million refugees from North Vietnam in 1954 and 1955 further burdened the economy.

41 Backed by substantial US support, the GVN has been able to achieve appreciable economic progress Besides building up a modern military force and relocating the refugees. South Vietnam has repaired and extended its badly damaged transportation network, initiated an extensive land reform program, restored its agricultural production, and established the foundation for industrial growth.

42. By 1959, the OVN was beginning to move shead on expanding economic development. However, the sudden, marked rise in guerrilla warfare widely affected GVN economic plans and since late 1960, there has been a notice-fable slackening in the momentum of economic progress. Communist interference with the flow of rice from the countryside to the urban centers has caused a decrease in the amount available for export and contributed to a rise in price. Faigen merchants have encountered increasing difficulty in delivering their prejonandise to the sillages. Domestic commerce in general has declined in part because of the uncertainties of the political situation. Communist sabolage of loads and bridges and control of certain areas have set back government reconstruction and agrarian reform programs. Although there has been an increase in the production of rubber, the leading source of foreign exchange, rubber plantations are under constant harassment by Communist terrorists.

43 Despite South Vietnam's economic recovery, the country continues to be highly dependent upon the US. From 1955 through 1960. US comomic aid to the GVN came to about $1.4 billion; most of this has been for defense support. Exports from the GVN (chiefly rubbe: and rice) pay for only about a quarter of the consumer and other goods that are imported. The remainder of the imports are largely financed by the US commercial import program under which plasters are made available to the GVN through the local sale of imported goods finitially purchased with US aid dollars. France has been : South Vietnam's principal buyer and suppher. The US is second in both buying from and selling to South Vietnam. Japan is becoming increasingly important as a supplier.

H. Economic Prospects Continued improvement in the GVN's economic position over the next few years will depend largely on the course of the war against the Vie' Cong insurgents. Moreover, if the GVN is to maintain larger military and security forces its dependence on US aid will increase. The security situation also will continue to affect adversely the willingness of the OVN to undertake fiscal reforms, urged by the US, aimed at increasing tax revenues.

45. Agrarian reform and land distribution programs, together with highway and canal reconstruction, will continue to suffer as long as the GVN centrol of much of the country-side, particularly in the Mekong delta area, remains as tenuous as it is at present. The effect of prolonged, unrelieved insecurity in the countryside would be a decline of agricultural output, a further decline in domestic commerce, and a lowering of business confidence in South Vietnam. The cumulative effect of all these developments could be inflation, particularly if the OVN were to undertake large-scale deficit financing of its budget.

an be decreased in the short run only by further rises in the availability of rubber and rice for export. Over the longer run, however. South Vi-tnam will have to rely increasingly on developing new export possibilities through agricultural diversification and on increasing its production of many light consumer goods that are imported at present. In any event, South Vieth will continue for the foreseeable futtine require extensive US aid to finance its surge balance of payments deficit.

IV. THE COMMUNIST THREAT TO SOUTH VIETNAM

47. The Communist threat to South Vietnam consists of three interrelated elements the external military threat posed by the North Vietnamese Army; an hiparding program of guerrilla warfare and terrorism throughout South Vietnam; and an intense political, psychological effort designed to demoralize the South Vietnamese public and the military and security forces, and to discredit Diem's government.

A. The Military Threat"

48. The North Vietnamese Army is almost twice the size of the South Vietnamese Army. The threat posted by the large northern forces has put constant psychological pressure on the OVN. South Vietnam has been obliged to maintain a substantial part of its forces along the 17th Parallel and more recently the Laotian border, despite the need to combat the growing Communit guerrilla strength in the south.

49. However, the immediate threat to South Victnam is not from an overt invasion. Instead, the current North Victnam campaign to bring South Victeam under Communist control is based upon a combination of guernils warfare and subversive activit. Of a "national liberation" character in both South Victnam and adjacent Laos. It is probably the Communist view that such tackes greatly reduce the risk to North Vietnam of US military intervention and, at the same time, provide good prospects of success at relatively little cast.

B. The Guerrilla Threat

50. Communist axiets for guerrilla and terrorist action against South Vietnam are formidable. In spite of substantial losses, the Viet Cong have increased their hard-core strength from an estimated 4,000 in April 1960 to more than 12,000 by mid-1961. This increase was accor plished by local recruitment and by infit ...lon by land and sea from North Vietnam We estimate that about hat of the imported Viet Cong weapons are brought in by sea. The guerrillas are augmented by several thousand supporters who ostensibly are innocent citizens but who join the organized insurgent bands to assist in intelligence, sauotage, propaganda, and terrorist operations. By relying on tactics of surprise, concentration for attack and dispersal upon withdrawal, the guerrillas achieve maxin um effectiveness. They appear to have good intelligence on the plans and movements of government forces sent on antiguerrilla missions. Viet Cong morale is probably good and there are few delections from their ranks to GVN forces.

51. Viet Cong guerrilla and terrorist activity is intended to assert Communist authority over increasingly large parts of the countryside in anticipation of setting up fully "liberated areas" in which GVN authority is effectively denied, or of so weakening the Diem government as to precipitate its overthrow, or both. At present, more than half of the rural area in the product ve and highly populated region south and southwest of Saigon, as well as several areas to the northwere of Saigon, are under extensive control of the Communists. In these areas the government's authority is effective only by day and when backed up by military reinforcement. The Communists levy and collect taxex, direct the harvesting, control the disimbution of rice and other farm products, conduct indoctrination programs, and conscript recruits. Recently, the Vict Cong have begun to set up overt party organizations and provisional local government units in South Vietnam similar to those established during the Indochina War.

52. Vict Cong control in the countriside is based primarily upon organized coercion and terrorism. The number of Communist cadres and converts is probably small in most villages, but in the absence of GVN forces sufficient to protect the village against reprisals, those inclined to support the government and turn against the Communists are effectively contained. The high rate of assassinations of local officials and retaliatory murders is a continual reminder of the penalty of noncooperation with the local Vict Cong authorities?

53. The GVN is in the early stages of preparing an all-out effort based on a US-sponsored counterinsurgency plan to neutralize and if possible defeat the Viet Cong threat. Although action of a military nature dominates the plan, it also envisages coordinated actions in the political, economic, and psychological fields. Some aspects of the plan have already been initiated, including a new emphasis upon antiquerrilla warfare in army training and tactics and a reorganization of the command structure to provide centralized direction for the entire military effort. Moves have also been taken to reorganize the intelligênce apparatus aud reduce rivalrles and duplication of effort among the various intelligence services.

54. At present, the South Vietnamese Army numbers slightly over 150,000 men, of whom more than half have been continuously engaged in security operations. This is to be increased to 170,000 men under the counter-insurgency plan. Adding the army in the antiguerrilla campaign are the locally recruited and controlled security forces. (a) the Civil Guard, an armed rural militia of some 60,000 whose poor levels of training and equipment may improve under recently begun army programs; and (b) the 45,000-man Self-Defense Corps, a village constabulary with little training and few arms and heavily penetrated by the Viet Cong. These two security forces have suffered most of the South Vietnamese casualties during the past year. Scattered about through the country-side, with poor communications and coordination, they often fall prey to Viet Cong ambushes and raids for arms and ammunition.

55 GVN military capabilities and other re-  $^2$ sources for fighting the Communists are considerable. The military leadership is among the best in Southeast Asia and the rank and file troops have the spirit and willingness to fig. t. The civilian bureaucratic leadership is also strongly anti-Communist, but its effectiveness is impeded by inadequate delegation. of authority. There are no serious trends toward neutralism or toward a political accommodation with Hanol. Finally, the Vietnamesc peasants, however politically apathetic and discontented with the government, are by no means ready to surrender themselves. to the Viet Cong. given a greater effort by the government to protect them from Communist intimidation.

C. Political and Psychological Warfare

Congress the Lao Dong announced that its "immediate task" was to overthrow President Diem and form a "coalition" government in the south with which Hanoi could cooperate. To serve these ends, Hanoi has established a "National Liberation Front," with its own news agency and mobile, clandestine radio transmitters. As part of the campaign to overthrow the Diem government, the Viet Cong has stepped up its political and psychological warfare seeking to capitalize upon South Vietnam's problems.

57 The combination of the Communist political and psychological assault and the increasing non-Communist dissatisfaction with Diem and his government is as much a cause of for concern as the Viet Cong paramilitary effort. The Communists have tried to iden-1)(y them elves with the non-Communist opposition and to discredit Not family rule. To this end, they are seeking to intensify the real and imagined prievances of the peasants, the intellectuals, and military and civilian officials. Their National Inscration Front is probably intended to provide a rallying point for the restless and disenchanted non-Commanust elements From the Communist point of view it could serve as the core either of a government set up in a "liberated area," or of a government to replace the GVN in the confusion which would attend Diem's assay-Singtion of a successful non-Communist coup-

V. OUTLOOK FOR THE STRUGGLE IN SOUTH

58. The Hanoi regime is probably weking to bring its campaign of subversion, terrorism, and guerrifla warfare against South Vietnam to an early and successful conclusion, although it is probably not operating on any rigid, preconceived timetable. We believe that it will almost certainly increase the pace and scope of its paramilitary activity during the next few months. North Victnam's awareness of US intentions to mercase its aid and assistance to South Victiam will stimulair nitensified Viet Conglefforts to make maximum gains before US assistance can make a significant impact on the GVN's counterinsurgency capability. This increased Viet Cong (paramilitary act) by will be accompalited by increased political and psychological warfare efforts designed to denigrate Diem personally and to enfourage a popular front opposition. These efforts are likely to be coordinated with international political efforts by the larger Bloc powers.

59 Bouth Victuani's urban centers particularly Suigon, will probably be increasingly subjected to Viet Cong acts of terrorism designed to demoralize the public, disrupt the government, and merease the possibility of a non-Communist coup effort. The Viet Cong will probably make further attempts to assaminate Diem. Americans will probably continue to be singled out as special targets for terrorist activity. However, expanding its area of control in the countryside will probably remain the most important element of the Viet Cong paramilitary effort.

60 We believe that with continued high levels of US aid and a strenuous OVN effort, the problem of Viet Cong control of large areas of the countryside can in time be reduced. However, at least 12 to 18 months of effort will probably be required before much improvement begins to appear. Even if the GVN does reduce Viet Cong strength, it will require continued maximum effort-military, political, and economic -- to maintain its authority, and potentially troublesome pockets of Viet Cong resistance will probably remain for many years. South Victnam will not be able to completely sept its borders with North Victnam, Laus, and Cambodia to the infiltration of material and personnel from North

61 Communist advances in Laos bave had the double advantage, from the Communist point of view, of increasing the ability of the DRV to step up its guerrilla pressures on the GVN and of greding GVN confidence in . . US determination to resist Communist en-. croachment in Southeast Asia Mountain trails in southern Laos have been used freely by the Communists for years for movement of men and supplies between North and South Now, however, with Pathet Lio and Victoria -North Vietnamese forces in control of most of southern Lack except for towns along the Mekong, forces and supplies may be moved along the road nets, which the Communists probably are improving. Moreover, the crosion ofthe Royal Lao Covernment's control over southern Laos increases greatly the problems of deferding South Vietnam and intensifies , psychological pressures upon South Victnam's leaders, who have long feared the exposure of the left flank of their forces deployed to defend the 17th Parallel. The GVN has reacted by sending small special force units into southern Laos for reconnaissance purposes and by proceeding to establish additional army outposts on the South Victoam side of the frontier.

62 Thus, the outlook in South Vietnam is for a prolonged and difficult struggle with the Viet Cong insurgents. At the same time that the government is prosecuting the military s rampaign in the war against the Communists, it will have to act to prevent internal weakpresses and strains from causing its collapse If Laos becomes dominated by the Communists or by a leftist regime, the GVN struggle against the Viet Cong will take on new, more perilous dimensions. If there is a serious disruption of GVN leadership as a result of Diem's death or as the result of a military coup, any momentum the GVN's counterinsurgency efforts had achieved will be halted or reversed, at least for a time. The confusion and suspicion attending a coup effort could provide the Communists an opportunity to seize control of the government

60 US-GVN Relations The course of US-GVN relations will be an important element in the struggle against the Vat Cong and in wistaining South Victoamese morale cent increases in US assistance, a jointly agreed plan to combat Viet Cong insurgency, and manifestations to Diem of US sympathy and backing -such as the Vice President's visit - have provided a basis for a continuing close relationship between the two governments. However, the struggle ahead will be a long and difficult one involving many frustrations and difficulties for both South Vietnam and the US, and it is likely many disagreements concerning the implementation of the counterinsurgency plan will arise source of significant support and assistance is the controlling factor in the GVN's relations and attitudes toward the US. Diem will almost certainly confinue to press for increased ald further expansion of the armed forces, and a clear priority of military over political and economic efforts to andercut the Viet, Cong. Diem will be adarrant in his views as to how the GVN campaign against the Viet Cong should be wayed. He will tend fo regard US differences with his views or criticism of his inner circle as indications of weakening US confidence in him.

65 Diem probably still has some lingering suspicion of the extent of US confidence in and support of his leadership, resulting from the paratrooper coup effort of November 1960 and urgent US representations made during that year for liberal political reforms. In the event of another coup effort against Diem's government, he would probably expect quick and strong manifestations of US support and would feel that he did not have US confidence I such manifestations were not forthcoming.

(5) There is considerable an .ety within the OVN concerning the general US posture with respect to communism in the Far East. Diem probably regards US policy toward Lacs as an indicator of US resolution in standing against Communist advances in Asia, and US policy during the past year has almost certainly raised doubts in his mind. Other indicators probably would be Diem's interpretation of US policy loward Nationalist China and toward the issue of Chinese Communist representation in the UN Diem has no alternative to US support and assistance. Nevertheless, if he concludes that the US is weakening its anti-Communist posture in the Far East, he will almost certainly make strong protests to the US and become increasingly assertive and tubbern in his relations with the US.

47 International Attitudes. In providing the GVN a maximum of encouragement and extensive support in its struggle against the Communists, the US will inevitably become identified with the GVN's success or fallure. The US will be under heavy pressure from other members of the non-Communist world, many of whom view the Victnam struggle in differing tern # For example, the neighboring countries such as Thailand, Cambodia, Burma, Indonesia, the Philippines, and Nafiouralist Chin i, have all to some extent yiewed developments in Laos as a gauge of US willingness and ability to help an anti-Communist . Asian government stand against a Communist "national liberation" campaign. They will almost certainly look upon the struggle for Vietnam as a cratical test of such US willingis s and ability. All of them, including the neitrals, would probe uffer demoralization and loss of confidence as their prospects for maintaining their independence if the Communists were to gain control of South Vietnam. This loss of confidence might even extend to India.

68 Among the Western alles, the UK and France are especially concerned by the Vietnam problem. Both governments have had serious reservations over aspects of US policy throughout the crisis in Laos and almost certainly tend to view the developing situation in Victuam in terms of another potential Laos. The French with shour memories of the Indochina War and the British with their experience in Malaya tend to be pessimistic regarding OVN prospects for coping with the Victory Cong threat. Both France and the UK are probably fearful that the US may become embroiled in a crisis in Victuam at a time when in their view full Western strength and attention should be directed toward problems in Vestern Europe, and they will probably seek to influence the US to avoid such a situation.

STRENGTHS AND CAPABILITIES OF THE DRY AND GYN ARMED FORCES

A. Demorratic Republic of Vietnam

1 The North Vietnamese as med forces consist of the 205,000-main People's Army of Virtaam (PAVN) 100,000 armed militia, a small crastal naval force, and an incipient air force The PAVN is a well-temped infantes army. adapted to the terrain and climate of Indochana and experienced in the fieldly mountain and jungle warfar. With help from Con may seat China, the PAVN has uncreased considerably its capabilities since the Indochine War. In 1954, by concentrating its entire to rarrest on a single objective the PAVN construction attack of finited duration using three divisions supported by direct artimers fire. Today it is capable of deploying for he attack at least five or its 14 distances and of providing sub-fantially greater logistic and combat support, including indicest artif lery fire. The PAVN has excellent mobility on find at desfensive experience with techniques of logistic support by primitive means. The trend in the training and organization of the PAYN is toward the development of a convento not force, the contrast with its essentially guer alla character in the early 1950's.

2. The available evidence indicates that the morale of the armed forces is good and that officer loyalty to the regime is not open to serious guestion. The ming standard of the average soldier is generally higher than his givilian counterpart. The PAVN considers itself a victorious termy which has won its laurets by defeating a modern European power in battle. It has a simple, popular mission eto unify Vietnam under a Communist pegime, and in this aim, it is led by a nat obal hero. General Vo Nguyen Gusp. Potential routees of division and disloyalty within the aimed lorees, such as the presence of both pro Soviet and pro-Chinese factions, do not appear to have developed. There have been relatively few desertions or desections from the North Victnamese armed forces. The regime's present economic problems, particularly, the shortages of food could in time agnificantly effect the morale and loyalty of the North Victianiese armed forces, however, as yet then have been no indications of such an inject.

3 The EAVN is almost completely dependent upon foreign sources for the supply of armalments and instead and for technical and specialist training. If is shown in communications facilities, armained vehicles, and air support. Most inflicing aid has come from Communist Chara. In the event of overt military operations against South Victnam, the PAVN's most upon need for assistance would be in the tailest of transportation and communication. The provision of additional air transport capability by the USSR of Communication would be sent the PAVN's logistics problem.

4. In secent years borth Vietnam has acquired a funited air capability with considerable milstary potential. Tie North Vietnames: resime has maintained and renovated former French airfields and his acquired several new types of small transports. North Victnamese personnel have probably taken part in the So let airlift, even to the extent of photing UrSR supplied aircraft. In addition a few IL to propeller fighters have been observed in North Victoria and may have been turned over to the DRV. These developmen, together with the organ, ration of an air conce headquarters in the Defe ise Ministry, suggest that the recime is developing a factical air arm Regardless of how rapidly North Vietnum develors an air info . Sowerer, its air to other has already because, as denienstructed by the Soviet artists from Rance into hace a unful a fjunct to Communitals power in in Far Eas'.

B Government of Getnam

5 At present, the GVN's Arroy numbers 150,000, it is in process of being increased by 20,000. The 5.50 is an navy, equipped with patrol biats and innesweepers, provides the GNN some capability for river and coastal patrol and detection. The air force of about 5,000 mcn (215 pilots) has 146 propeller-driven aircraft of which about 115 are assigned to facts at units. Most of the aircraft are transport (C 47) and liaison (L-19) types. The air force figh er squadron flying AD 4's has performed well in support of ground operations and the transport group is combut ready and has demonstrated its ability in supply and paratroop int-suons.

- of The South Vie'namese arm d forces are fully dependent up in US inditary assistance. The US Military A sistance Advisory Group, which numbered about 685 officers and men in April 1961, provides advisors to the armed forces in addition to furnishing legistical and framing support. US idvisors have recently begun to accompany units in the field. US military aid in Fiscal Year 1962 is projected at about $161 million for 14AP and $99 million for supporting assistance. Substantial additional funds for supporting assistance are being considered to implement the new sounter-insurgency plant.
- 7 The major strength of the South Vietnamese Army Les in its extensive combat empirication in counterquerries warfare. It has been very langely trained under fire. Increasingly official with combat records are mixing into command at more a morelession. The troops generally have a good knowledge of the terrain in which they fight and have developed, through training and experience, the ability to move and fight under difficult conditions. Leadership at the lower sevels is adequate, and it is improving as the result of intensive leadership training.
- 8 The inorale of the South Victnamese armed forces sagged in early 1980 when the new Vist Cong offensive was resulting in humilating defeats and frustrating, ineffectual counteractions. Since then, the army has rallied and, in late 1960 and early 1961, began to score successes in the field against the guerrillas. The activation of additional ranger companies and broadened ranger training will probably increase the army's counterguerrilla.

capabilities. Moreover, in recent operations against the Vk. Cong. the armed forces have demonstrated improved ability to launch and carry out coordinated operations, using combined arms.

- 9 Weaknesses and deficiencies of the South Virtnamese Army include lack of technical competence among the troops, inadequate communications and transportation; and ineffective logistics. The aimy lacks effective intelligence, and there are not enough qualified officers above the battalion levels. No effective statem of rotating compatitions, has jet been established, with the result that some units have been committed to unduly probinged periods of anti-Vict Cong operations without pilet. The Communists are purpost a flainly seeking to penetrate and subsect the South Victoriance armed forces. There is try little evidence that they have made any significant headway
- 10 Even if prosently projected programs to expand the QVN armed forces and to then use its anti-incurgency capabilities were fully reslight, South Vietnam would still be incomable or granting full-scale mert attack by the Nor in Vietnames: Army without substantial outside assistance. At the most, the armed forces of South Vietnam, by themselves, would be able to contain a minor FAVN penetration across the national boundaries. In the event of a full-scale PAVN trivation across the 17th Parallel or through Laus, the South Vietnamese armed forces could probably constuct effective delaying actions for one to two weeks before taking up close defensive positions around the Tourane base area. With US ar and naval support, thu area probably could be held for another 15-30 days. In the event of event invasion, the Viet Cong insurgent guerrillas would hunch attacks on the armed forces and their facilities throughout South Vietnam With the Scuth Victnamese forces thus under attack from the two sides, the Viet Cong probably could gain control of the plateau region .. and large parts of the delta area, causing considerable South Vietnamese troops to be tied down in the defense of Saigon.
